

The Avery Review Editorial Fellow 2020

APPLICATIONS DUE DECEMBER 2, 2019

The Avery Review, a journal of critical essays on architecture published by the Office of Publications at Columbia University's Graduate School of Architecture, Planning, and Preservation, is calling for candidates to apply to be the Avery Review's 2020 Editorial Fellow.

The Editorial Fellow will commission and develop essays based on their interest, will contribute their own essay, and will take part in our regular editorial process, including for our annual Essay Prize. They will likely be a recent graduate (or will soon be graduating) from an architectural degree program—but there are no explicit requirements. The Editorial Fellow will receive a stipend.

Should you be interested, please send us:

- Brief CV (two pages maximum)
- Contact information for two potential references
- A cover letter that discusses your particular editorial interests and topics you might want to pursue Candidates need not be located in the United States. The Avery Review aspires to broaden the diversity of voices in publishing, to support a wide range of perspectives on what constitutes architectural thought, and to encourage writers pursuing underexplored ideas. We welcome applicants who illuminate architecture's blind spots, who oppose its many complicities, who resist its production of norms and its participation in spatial violence, and who champion a more open, more equal built environment.

Applications can be emailed to editors@averyreview.com with the subject line "Editorial Fellow."
